

Question for February 26, 2004

9) An investigator of marine mammal movements has plotted the home ranges of dolphins as vertical and horizontal values on a map. He calculates the variance of these values so animals that move more to the extremes of their range will have a higher variance than animals that stay nearer the center of their range. His objective is to compare the movements of males versus females. What type of test could be used for this test?