

Question for April 15, 2004 Quiz 20 PDF

20) Morphometric relationships are common occurrences in biology. These relationships are used to convert measurements, taxonomic identification and numerous other purposes. In the case below the authors have developed an equation that will convert measurements of individual bacterial cell volumes (μm^3) to dry weights (fg). What technique would be used for the development of such an equation?

